Character Analysis

Think about a time when you were in an undesirable situation. For example, it could be a time that someone made you feel sad or treated you in an unfair manner.

Now, think about how you would have wanted others to treat you when you were in that situation. It is important to show empathy towards others when they are in undesirable situations. Empathy is the ability to understand what other people are feeling, especially in times of difficulty for them.

In this activity, you will work by yourself then in your group to analyze what it would be like to be in someone else's situation.

1. On your own, look at the people found in your Character Chart. How do you think they feel? What makes you think so?

2. Now, in your groups, share your ideas with one another. Write down any new or interesting thoughts from your groupmates.

3. In your groups, discuss how you would try to reconcile with the people in your Character Chart if you were responsible for placing them into their current situation. Write down your ideas..

4. In your groups, discuss how empathy is important in helping to understand those who are in difficult situations. Write down your ideas.
